B.C., that attests to the fact that sea farming is anything but new. Practiced for conturies, aquaculture is progressing to high-technology status, drawing on advances in marine biology, genetics and other scientific disciplines.

Aquaculture encompasses a wide range of technologies, Butler wrote, for the husbandry of fish or plants within controlled aquatic environments. In 1979, the value of farm shipments of aquaculture products was $89,000,000. By 1989 this figures is expected to reach nearly $500,000,000.

During our Sagebrush Circuit tour last fall we visited Valley Trout Farms, Inc., Hagerman, Idaho. where we learned quite a bit about commercial fish farming. Feed conversion, we learned, is one on one; trout production is measured by How competitive is fish currently to red meat? In Butler's article he quoted a recent National Western Restaurant Assn. survey that showed that 31% of dinner customers said they preferred seafood, compared with only 21% who chose steak.

As in every industry, we learned at the Hagerman farm that they were vaccinating the fish to control disease. Large concentrations of fish was of constant concern to the Idaho growers, who cautioned our tour members not to put their hands in the water because this might cause the spread of disease.

Butler noted that major American companies, like Coca-Cola Co., Campbell Soup Inmont Corp .. <sup>10</sup> Tiant Weverhause Co., involved in develpping seafoods produced by aquaculture, are grappling with basic questions of marketing strategy and consumer education.

Finally, "Although recent trends in dictary habits are encouraging (like the National Restaurant Assn. survey)," says Butler, "the U.S. cannot be described as a fish-eating nation. We consume an average of 10 to 12 lbs. of fish annually per person. In the Orient this figure is 70 to 80 lbs. Three out of every five pounds of fish consumed in American is eaten in restaurants." Suppose we'll be growing fish on some of our western ranches in the future; in addition to cattle and PRICES CLIMB-Cattle producers are enjoying a strong fed cattle market thanks to better beef movement at the retail level. Declining fed cattle numbers, aggressive beef advertising and a special "food alert" issued by the USDA have been cited as factors associated with the market improvement. A complete summary of recent market activity appears in this week's WLJ Market Roundup.

 Market Roundup:

Retail surge boosts prices for fed cattle

WHILE CATTLE PRICES continue to trade in the low $70 per cwt. range, and carcass prices hit $109 in packer to packer trading, the question now seems to be whether demand can sustain those or higher levels. The National Provisioner warns that a spread of more than two dollars usually elicits concern in the industry. CNS reports that packer to packer trading is supporting the top end of the market. Jobbers, meanwhile, are buying beef at the low end because of their severe profit restrictions.

The reason for slaughterers selling at the low end, is because it is reported that there are more sellers of carcass beef than there are buyers, and that beef must be moved if it is in the cooler. Packers are expected to support boef prices in the $106-109 range to make slaughtering $70-72 live cattle profitable, or at least a breakeven proposition.

Just a month ago in the livestock and meat futures markets, lower prices were the norm and higher prices were

Fledd, $1500. The San Juan Basin Research Center and the 4 Corners BCIA bull test sale has over the years, established itself as one of the top buil test stations in the entire country. This year, that reputation paid off handsomely for the cooperators and the SJBRC. The sale drew a very large crowd, in fact it was probably one of the largest ever. They came from a wide geographic area and the object of their attention was the association sale and the result were very encouraging to the buyers, consignors and officers of llio association. The 140 day gain tost was conducted at the Jack Shoy feedlot with the assistance of the Tri River Extension Office and Hurman Sodorquist. Following a slow start the bulls came on strong and gained well enought croate atrong interest in the local trado aroa. The sale pavilion we filled to capacity for the sale and the crow kept the bulls coming in good fashion. Domand airong for the most part as the buying crowd liked what they Volume buyer was Joe Torres, Angel Fire, New Mexico.

Starting a new bull lest and sale is always en embilious undertaking and credit should be given to all the consignors who entored bulls and to the officer and directors of the association work. Market Roundup:

Retail surge boosts prices for fed cattle

the exception, representing a technical correction. That situation, at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange (CME) appears to have taken a 180-degree turn. As of this moment, no one has claimed a run-away bull market, but lately advancing prices have been the exception. The image of the April live cuttle contract falling below $60 per cwt. does not seem that faded, but April has expired a $67.27 and the now-nearly June contract closed at $70.97.

Slaughter steers followed suit, with their continued price advance under generally good demand, according to market sources. Central Plains direct markets closed $1,50-3.50 higher, while western markets closed one to two

Monday's USDA 23-state Cattle-On-Feed Report, which seemed amazingly neutral for a major quarterly report, basically confirmed slowly tightening fed cattle numbers which have led to the current low $70 market prices.
